Why EXTENDED STORAGE PREP SERVICE

Engines were made to run and to be run regularly. The longer they sit idle the more they can develop problems you'll have to deal with later.

Oil, antifreeze and gasoline don't hold up well when sitting in an engine for months or even years. Fluids break down, seals leak and corrosion sets in on various parts of the engine. And the delivery systems that move these fluids like fuel and oil pumps, hoses and filters can all cause problems when starting an old engine.

Gas is a highly refined product that vaporizes and combusts easily. The same chemicals that give gas these properties are also the ones that allow it to evaporate over time and cause the gas to lose its ability to ignite easily. In addition to evaporation, a process called oxidation can occur, when chemicals in the gas mix with oxygen. This produces deposits in the gas that can clog fuel lines, fuel filters, the carburetor and fuel injectors. Gasoline that has ethanol in it also tends to draw moisture out of the air and can contaminate the gas as well.
